1985, The Year Of living Dangerously, Part 4.

In last month's episode, our hero was stranded on the Olympic peninsula with serious engine trouble. Fortunately, my sister happens to live in Port Angeles. I called her and we had my car towed to her place. I then spent the next couple of days of my vacation repairing the engine. I drove it home, then signed up for a weekend backpack. I asked to ride in someone else's car this time. The backpack trip was uneventful, except for bad weather.

On the last weekend in October I went on a dayhike, coincidentally, with the same lady I'd gone backpacking with in July and August. It was raining cats and dogs when we left the trailhead. We crossed the South fork of the Stillaguamish river on the way to Headlee pass. About fifteen minutes later we decided we'd had enough of the rain, and headed back towards the trailhead. The Stillaguamish river had risen and now was flowing over the footlog we'd used to cross it. We were stranded with just the gear in our daypacks. If you can't wait until next month to find out what happened to us, this trip was described in a couple of issues of Signpost magazine.
